Shows a window with notifications when the selected time expires. Minute Timer Pros: A high-impact lightweight countdown timer. A smaller icon in the System Tray. Free! Minute Timer Cons: Not as popular as some other countdown timers. A small description to show the timer is active. Minute Timer Click here to rate this countdown timer. 10. Super Countdown Timer The previous countdown timer doesn't give you the smallest desktop footprint, but Super Countdown Timer definitely performs better than it looks at first glance. As soon as you start it, the app automatically reveals all the available configuration options, so you don't have to waste a minute. The number of configuration options, however, is not limited to the number of sliders. The app allows you to switch the value format, choose a customized font and even change the background color and the border color. As a matter of fact, this countdown timer offers a user-friendly and very complex configuration panel where all the settings are grouped in tidy categories. Let's see it in detail: Duration format Change the date and time format of the countdown timer. Choose between hh:mm:ss and hh mm ss. By setting the format to mm ss, the app shows the text in minutes and seconds only. The HH format lets the app count time in hours, minutes and seconds. Both are represented in a decimal format. Seconds By default, the timer shows the duration of the countdown in seconds only. This option lets you set the counting in minutes and the minutes, while the seconds are ignored. Am/pm This option allows you to configure whether the hour starts from the specified time or whether the time is midnight. To begin the counting from midnight, select am. To begin the counting from the desired time, select pm. Minimum time Optional setting, enables you to specify the minimum duration of the countdown timer, ignoring seconds (hh:mm:ss). Enter a number in order to configure the minimum countdown time. Auto pause By setting this option, the countdown timer pauses when the main window is minimized, and resumes counting after the window is restored. Scheduled start Select this option to tell the timer to start counting when the specified date is reached. Sched

Minute Timer is a countdown timer for Windows. The timer is not controlled by the mouse, so it's suitable for computer-based tasks that require your attention, eg. Preparing your exams for a test, washing up after you've had dinner, or even getting dressed. Minute Timer is a very simple timer. Just set the countdown timer, start the timer. Simple. For a countdown timer, an audio alert is played when the time is up. The alert will stop the timer. Additional features include:

- Support for start- and stop-counting
- Option to show a clock in the system tray
- Ability to pause the timer when the main window is minimized
- Option to pause the countdown when the mouse pointer hovers over the main window
- Option to continue counting if the mouse pointer hovers over the main window
- Option to show the seconds as hours and minutes
- Option to show the milliseconds as hours, minutes and seconds
- Option to show the remaining time in full-width or half-width text
- Option to change the display mode
- Option to show or hide the timer count

Published by zach.christensen 10 comments on "Minute Timer - Countdown Timer for Windows" I don't like it, mainly because it's not as straightforward as my other timer. I'm trying to finish a manuscript while I try to study for another test. I find it irritating that I cannot have any kind of audio alert, like a bell or an alarm clock, beep or anything. That, and the default setting is for the clock to count down for '30 seconds' which can cause more than a little panic when I'm sitting there thinking 'he's about to release the beast'. It may be a 'lightweight timer', but it's not quite right. I really do think this is a great little program, but I'm really finding it difficult to use because I cannot make it sound an alert that I really want to hear. In addition, it could be much more customizable. For example, it doesn't have a setting to show the time in full- or half-width. Another thing I find frustrating is that it doesn't have a keyboard shortcut, or a way to make sure it's the only window in

What's New in the Minute Timer?

Designed for new Windows users as well as casual, Countdown Timer can help you plan important events and notify on the progress for professionals. The program has a user-friendly interface which combines the simplicity of a Windows countdown timer with the functionality of countdown timers. This also includes notifications, advanced settings, multiple profiles and many other features. You can setup as many profiles as you need and have all these profiles automatically recognize each other's settings when you open them. You can also delete your profiles, so you can keep the simplest one for yourself while saving space for other profile setups. It is possible to set up to eight different timers so that the program can display all the timers at a time. You can easily activate and deactivate the timers according to your needs and the program will keep the oldest timers active and pause the ones that are inactive. It is possible to display notifications for multiple timers at the same time. You can also set the notification duration and the notification sound. Calculate multiple timers in several different ways and you will be able to see the timers in a simple and user-friendly way. You can set different alarms based on the time and the date. Once the time is set, you can modify it up to the minute. This is possible for both settings in a profile and for individual timers. You can easily set up your own timer by clicking on the “Start button”. Once the time and the name are set, the timer will be displayed in a profile window. You can also add your own time and close the window. An alarm function has also been included. You can set individual alarms for the different timers. Each timer can also be set to automatically pause when the main window is minimized. The notification mode is a feature of the program that tells you when the timer is about to run out. You can choose one of four options, none, beep, sound or audio. When the time is close, you will be informed about the correct option and will be able to find it in the settings of the program. You can easily change the location of the timer in the system tray. You can also set the timer color for different profiles. You can set the system tray icon to be in a flash if you want. You can change the sound, stopwatch and counter display options. You will be able to easily move individual timers so that you can manage them as a whole. You can also set
