We are about to bring a genre back to life. Re-introduce the fun and exhilaration of some of gaming's most classic games. Play Tanks Free: - War is a funny thing. Remember the good times of the ole eight-bit and 16-bit era? It was a time of heavy duty arcade fun, with joysticks, joypads, and joysticks. These games may have had their shortcomings, but they had their moments. There was a time when many games were half-baked. It took a bit for games to get smart. Of course, most games have evolved in the past few decades, but the ole 'n' busted gameplay has withstood the test of time. Tanks Free is a two-player game that throws a wrench in the system. The gameplay is basic; you move your tanks, you click on things to shoot at them, and you can eventually destroy your opponent in a variety of ways. The game is free, and it's on Steam. If you are looking for an honest game and aren't worried about your speed input, give this game a try. It's a retro experience that worked back then, and it works today. The Game Tanks Free is a game where you move your tanks through six different mission levels. When you start out, you can't control your tank; you can only move left and right, up and down, and fire. You can look at your opponent to try and see his/her/its tank, but you can't shoot them. You're a controller-less tank in this game, and it can feel at times like going through molasses. The game is similar to a mobile shooter in style; you move left and right while you shoot left and right. The way you move your tank is a bit of a chore, but the shooting feels satisfying in the end. While the game is easy enough, there is a chance to beat your opponent if you are better at using your controller than your opponent. You are able to swipe left and right with your controller to turn it in the desired direction. There is a bit of an issue with this; sometimes, the tank will turn with your controller and sometimes it won't. At first, it is a little disconcerting, but as you progress, you'll get used to it and be able to take advantage of your

(DAY 1 - FISHING ENTRIES BEGIN) This game started as an experiment in my spare time and there is a lot of room for improvement and feedback. There is no main goal other than to have fun and learn how to do this game with the minimum of coding and the maximum possible fun. You can compete with your catch or just have some fun with others. You can also just play it alone to see how it evolves... This game is based on Google's Cardboard. No other device is needed. The fishing ring allows you to interact with the fish when you have the item placed in the right position. Interaction happens when the fish has its nose inside the ring. If the fish doesn't like the smell of the ring, it will leave. If the fish is close to the ring and you are in the right place, the fish will move towards the ring, pick it up, rest it on its nose, open its mouth for you to feed it a flake and releasing it into the water. You have to be cautious with the position and size of the ring to not break it. The player should try to catch as many fish as possible within the time of the round. You can also try to beat the others or catch the biggest fish by catching it more times in less time. A round of fishing can last a few minutes or up to one hour. Playtests or fishing events can be organized: - FishOutdoors - Forum fishing tournaments - Feel free to organize your own... Just remember that the game is still developing and it might not have all the features you want. No release date has been set as the game is still being developed but I have done all I can for the moment. Here is a video where you can try it: I will keep the game alive and updated with new features and contests. I have learned many things on my way... The more you use the game and send feedback the more I'll learn and you will see it evolving. The game is still under development... There are many possible features and the game can evolve to the point that you can do more than just fishing. c9d1549cdd

What's new in Up In The Air:

Arrival — More Flood Insurance Claims While there were more than half a dozen floods reported by monitoring stations across the state of New Jersey, the Hudson River once again showed up as the worst of them as a historic late-June nor'easter flooded most of New Jersey. Thankfully, this time the Nor'easter did not bring rising flood waters: the Hudson came mostly only as rain. The flooding in one area of Hoboken was so severe, fans of the New York Yankees had to leave Yankee Stadium due to rising waters in the ballpark. Just like last year, the heaviest rains fell in the northeast upstate of the State. However, unlike 2012 in which the heaviest rain fell as far west as Asbury Park, the heaviest rain fell in the northeast in 2012 instead. Much rain — up to 13.5 inches of rain — fell in just a few short hours of this year's July 4th weekend, much of it in the far northeast corner of the state, which again shows that the poorly-performing USGS Drought Monitor maps are not in tune with reality. The rain fell from Friday evening through the day on Tuesday, and regions statewide were under several inches of rain. Parts of eastern New Jersey and western New York received more than five inches of rain. Since last year, the FEMA National Flood Insurance Program recently came out with a new (for this year) map covering the state with more emphasis on the southern Hudson River Corridor. Prior to this year, the maps did not include any additional information about the Hudson River Corridor. Therefore, a major portion of the 30,000 policies issued last year were sold in the flood plain of the Hudson River, and the insurers and FEMA have a major challenge getting out the policies that have been sold. In response to the lack of detail on previous maps, FEMA released a region-specific map this July in the county-by-county format — which is an improvement over a federal-format flood map presented last year by USGS — but similar to the previous year's-relief-map, which left out far too many households, businesses, and schools in New York City and heavily flooded areas of New York City, and other vulnerable coastal areas. The following map shows 30,000 property owners holding current New Jersey flood insurance policies. The red lines show the approximately 30,000 policyholders that dwell within the floodplain of the Hudson River. Compare this map to the flood insurance map of New Jersey
