via the interaction between oxyhaemoglobin in the blood and virus. Thus, to study these in cases of COVID-19, helps researchers to find the mechanism of severity and development of the disease. This method could be used to study the mechanism for synthetic oxygen carriers, which maintains the level of blood oxygenation during COVID-19 infection. Acetylsalicylic acid ----- Aspirin is a salicylic acid derivate in pharmaceutical drugs and is the most common representative of a group of anti-inflammatory drugs called NSAIDs. It comes in the form of salicilate and has been shown to help reduce the risk of thrombotic events (heart attack or stroke) by inhibiting the platelet enzyme, cyclooxygenase. Numerous clinical trials found that people who were given aspirin as regular treatment had a lower risk of dying from cardiovascular events. Researchers have suggested that the cause for this is the inhibition of platelet formation. However, there is no solid evidence that shows that any NSAIDs can prevent or treat COVID-19. If we look at the underlying mechanism of actions of drugs, NSAIDs works primarily by inhibiting the expression of pro-inflammatory enzymes, such as cyclooxygenase-2 (COX-2). Current evidence suggests that the over-expression of the latter in vivo, may be involved in pathogenesis of severe
