Users are increasingly relying on computing devices to access and interact with various data and services. For example, users frequently access social networking applications, such as Facebook™, in order to connect with friends, family, and other acquaintances.

As is known, social networking applications facilitate user interaction with data and services on networks such as the Internet. Generally, a user enters information about his or her personal and professional life into a social networking application. This information may include information regarding employment, interests, hobbies, education, groups, and other demographic information about the user. Users can also upload content items such as digital photographs and other images, digital music, digital video, digital files, and so on. As the amount of personal and private information collected by social networking applications has increased, user information is frequently collected and stored in centralized databases maintained by the social networking application provider. Information about users may be collected and stored for various purposes. For example, when a user enters information into a social networking application, the social networking application may query a centralized database for this information. The centralized database may be subsequently used to enhance or personalize the user experience with the social networking application. It is with respect to these and other general considerations that embodiments have been made. Also, although relatively specific problems have been discussed, it should be understood that the embodiments should not be limited to solving the specific problems identified in the background. Well, the announcement that Jeff Bezos has been spotted in NYC, and that we will soon see more of his face, certainly excites me, as will the rumors that he's looking to move to Washington or at least around the triangle region of Fairfax, Reston and Herndon, which just so happens to be in my backyard. Since he is a major investor in Herndon, I would guess that he is also a major player in Reston and that's where I would put a bet on. Anyway, enough speculation, here's a recent interview with him that I find particularly amusing. It's funny, I think that the bond fund story is like asking "How many members of the Red Sox Nation do you know who are also Red Sox employees?" Amazon, a Dow 30 company, is a darling for most investors right now. Their stock's market capitalization is bigger than any of the other companies in the Dow (except for Exxon Mobil

Although epithelial cells play a role in the normal development of the brain and in multiple pathologic processes of brain disease, the molecular basis of the regulation of epithelial cell differentiation in the brain remains largely unknown. NIM/homeodomain proteins have been described that control cell fate determination in various developing tissues and appear to be required for epithelial cell differentiation in the mature nervous system. In this proposal, the genes for these proteins will be isolated and characterized. This study will focus on one homeodomain protein, NLX, which is expressed in the developing mouse and human brain. Its neuronal function is unknown, but its role as a repressor of myogenic genes makes NLX an ideal candidate for a regulatory protein that controls epithelial cell differentiation in the nervous system. The specific aims of the grant are: (1) To isolate and characterize the genes for the NIM/homeobox proteins in mouse and human and to develop molecular probes for their study. (2) To examine the expression and development of these genes in the brain. (3) To study their role in epithelial cell differentiation by transfecting cultured epithelial cells with NIM/homeobox genes and the subsequent effect on cell proliferation,
