Controversy: I actually really like this movie and it is not without its faults, which makes it even better. If you find the humor a bit too crass, too much dirty words for your taste and just plain ugly, dont be afraid to skip it, cause it is still fun and its pretty short. The story is really the only reason I have to watch this bad movie, sadly. The story revolves around a paramedic named Robert Neville (who doesn't have the last name Berdell) as he battles an infestation of zombies. This infestation is brought on by a meteor that fell to Earth after its orbit around the sun collapsed, thus allowing a number of humans to be infected by a virus. This virus causes the infected to become flesh eating zombies with a distinct lack of social skills and desire for your breasts. As the movie progresses, a lot of strange things happen, with a lot of weird stuff going on, people turning into zombies or not. One thing I find interesting about this movie is how it goes from not letting you know much about what is going on, to being fairly obvious, before you are ready to know. Which was funny, cause you really think you know whats going on but you arent really sure. There were a lot of very clever things that went on in the movie, and for this one, I enjoyed it so much, I decided to watch the Director's cut, as I had never watched the director's cut of any of the other 7 zombie movies that I have seen, and this is the first time I watched the director's cut of any movie. So this is what I recommend you do with this one, watch the director's cut. The original ending of this movie was very different from what it turned out to be, they had the main character of this movie believing that he is either a zombie or has a zombie virus infecting him but at the end of the movie, he is cured. They just decided to keep this ending, instead of going with the one that was there in the original script. It was far better than the new ending they had created. It was a much more subtle ending, and he even found the cure against the scientist who had created the virus in the first place.
