I have created a user in django. I want to add a new field called 'ext' in the user table. In the admin page, i have added 'ext' field, it is displayed as 'None' as i am not adding it to the User model. I have tried to add it to the User model, but how to display it on the website? I dont know how to display the field on the website. A: You need to override the user profile page in Django Admin. For example, create a new view that overrides the default user details page. Then, add that view to your URLconf (which is probably urls.py) And finally, make sure you have an override for that view, like: from django.contrib.auth import views as auth_views class UserProfileView(auth_views.UserProfileView): ... and have that view served at /accounts/profile/ EDIT: Just to point out what @Shashank, @Isidro and @user2668690 are saying: I would recommend avoiding overriding core Django functionality in a production site. However, if you want to display additional information for a User object and it doesn't have an object attribute, then I guess you're stuck with overloading the user details view.

O'Hara delivered one of the best individual performances of the 2014 tournament, and Lloyd returned to her home state with a record-setting performance. So who was the star of the Columbia win? Let's see what our media colleagues had to say... Andy MacLeod of the Columbia Missourian had a glowing opinion on Lloyd's performance. The Seattle Red Stars forward has been the key cog for the U.S. this summer, but MacLeod has called her the best player in this summer's Women's World Cup. Sophie Thomas wrote about Lloyd
